FDIC Report Provides Overview of Mobile Payments Services

Mobile payments have the potential to significantly change how consumers pay for goods and services. "Mobile Payments: An Evolving Landscape," which appears in the Winter 2012 issue of Supervisory Insights released today, describes the range of mobile payments options, identifies the risks associated with their use, and looks at how banks that offer mobile payments services can ensure compliance with existing laws and regulations.

"Banks may work with nonbank third parties to offer mobile payments services to their customers. However, these third-party providers may not be knowledgeable about the regulatory environment in which banks operate," said Sandra L. Thompson, Director, Division of Risk Management Supervision. "Therefore, banks' oversight of third-party relationships will become increasingly important as the mobile payments area evolves."

Also in this issue, "High-Yield Checking Accounts: Know the Rules" reviews the typical features of these accounts and the issues that FDIC examiners have sometimes observed with the disclosures and marketing materials associated with these accounts. This article also highlights how examiners review banks' offerings of high-yield checking accounts for compliance with laws and regulations.

Supervisory Insights provides a forum for discussing how bank regulation and policy are put into practice in the field, sharing best practices, and communicating about the emerging issues that bank supervisors face. The journal is available on the FDIC's Web site at <http://www.fdic.gov/regulations/examinations/supervisory/insights/index.html>. Suggestions for future topics and requests for permission to reprint articles should be e-mailed to supervisoryjournal@fdic.gov. Requests for print copies should be e-mailed to publicinfo@fdic.gov.

Congress created the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in 1933 to restore public confidence in the nation's banking system. It promotes the safety and soundness of these institutions by identifying, monitoring and addressing risks to which they are exposed. The FDIC receives no federal tax dollars — insured financial institutions fund its operations.
